

As Internal Convenor this year, I've had the privilege of shaping the conversations that define our society. Writing the term card is about more than simply choosing motions; it's about capturing the spirit of the membership and creating debates that people are genuinely excited to be part of. Over the past year, I've worked to ensure that our motions are topical, creative, and genuinely fun, while still encouraging thoughtful and engaging debate. I'm proud that this approach helped us surpass the society's record for maiden speakers, bringing more new voices to the floor than ever before.

Debating should never feel intimidating or exclusive. One of my priorities has been making sure that our society remains a welcoming and diverse community where everyone feels comfortable giving their first speech, sharing their opinion, and getting involved. The strength of our debates comes from the variety of perspectives in the room, and continuing to grow that diversity is essential to the society's future.

At the same time, we are a society with an incredible history. That legacy shouldn't just be something we look back on, it should be something we build on. By pairing the society's traditions with fresh ideas, energy, and creativity, we can make Literific one of the most vibrant and popular societies on campus.

If re-elected, I will continue to deliver term cards that reflect what members actually want to debate, keep debates topical and engaging, and push the society to collaborate even more.
