

I'm Rosa Ivory, and I would love to be your Treasurer of this Literary and Scientific Society.

I would take up the torch, and make it my priority to secure a sponsorship—placing the treasury on firm financial footing to:

1. Fund everything from internal to schools to events, building up travel budgets and ensuring funds for stone-age cash-only southern buses.
2. Allow coordination with Social Officer, furthering the successes of the Charity Quiz and Drunk Debates in supporting worthy causes and making a small difference in these turbulent times.
3. Supply snacks for ordinary meetings (self-evident reasoning).

My anti-capitalist agenda would be tribute to the deviant nature of Literific history, as evidenced by rumours of sordid love affairs at the highest level. Despite certain stereotypes pertaining to this society, we are not all posh performative males: in voting for me, employed socialist feminist, you spit in the face of such notions.

From childhood, I exhibited a love of filling out excel spreadsheets and Transactional Authorisation forms. At eight, my skill in negotiating a household Nintendo via powerpoint presentation and cost-benefit analysis showed early talent for securing funding from the powers that be.

I have a deep and abiding passion for admin—particularly, collecting membership fees and ensuring debt repayment. In my free time, one of the activities I most enjoy is communicating on financial matters; including the provision of estimates for expenditure.

Voting for me would be a truly GOATed move by the members of this fine 170-year-old society.
