

Many of you reading this will have no idea who I am: I have been away completing my industrial placement over in Ipswich, though a few of you might have seen back over to deliver a speech a few weeks ago. Now I wish to be your next Events Officer! I gained significant experience as a junior council member last year being exposed to some of the largest events in the modern Literific's history which makes me an ideal candidate for events officer.

I want to deliver a genuinely cross-community range of speakers. I do not have a set agenda, for the most part; the priority is simply bringing in the most relevant and most interesting voices for us to experience together despite whatever background we come from.

We need to be much smarter about how we secure these guests. The University constantly has high-profile figures visiting. Rather than working in isolation, we need to strengthen our existing relationship with the university and build concrete partnerships. If a great speaker is already visiting Queen's, a handshake with the vice chancellor shouldn't just be the standard, so should a LitTalk.

Ultimately, I'm not trying to make wild or outlandish promises of speakers; that's not realistic, it's just electoral fluff! All I have is a pragmatic plan to keep the society's events engaging and frequent. I would really appreciate your support in becoming the events officer in the 2026-2027 session!
